Definition of Portfolios

Maori Health Service

Maori Health Services are “by Maori, for Maori” meaning they are services specifically targeted to iwi Maori, and are delivered by Iwi and Maori providers. The services provided are community-based and include primary health care, (particularly family health), and mental health.

(Note: iwi Maori health providers deliver services to the population but in the main their programmes target Maori because of their high morbidity and mortality rates and health inequalities. Many of the programmes provided are described as Kaupapa Maori because they incorporate Maori beliefs and understandings, and are delivered by Maori.)

Mental Health and Addictions

Mental health and addiction services provide treatment and recovery for individuals experiencing a mental illness or addiction issues. Mental health and addiction services also include support for families, and, increase society’s awareness of mental illness.

Services are delivered across the continuum of care, both regionally and locally. While some clients are able to lead relatively normal lives, others must rely on full time care within specially designed residential programmes that provide 24 hour, seven days a week services.

Primary Health Care Services

Primary Health Care Services are typically the first and the most frequent point of contact the public has with the health service. These services are available in the community and are delivered in a variety of settings including schools, workplaces, on marae and in people’s own homes.

- Primary health care services are usually accessed by self-referral. A range of health professionals provide primary health care services, including:

- General practice teams comprising general practitioners and primary health care practitioners
- Practice nurses
- Public health nurses and district nurses
- Iwi and Maori health workers
- Allied health therapists
- Dentists and dental therapists
- Pharmacists
- Midwives and lead maternity carers
- A variety of practitioners working in alternative or complementary health fields.

Service providers are supported by community pharmacy, diagnostic radiology and laboratory services. These services are often free or provided on a highly subsidised basis to the public and make up a major part of the cost of primary care within the district.

Public Health

Public Health is a specialised area of health that addresses the health and well-being of a population. Services are aimed at improving, promoting or protecting health, and/or preventing population-wide disease, disability or injury. Public health includes health promotion services, health protection and regulatory services, plus population-based disease prevention strategies such as the breast screening and cervical screening programmes.

Public health services are commonly clustered around the following activities:

- Public Health Promotion Services
- Public Health Protection and Regulatory Services
- Prevention and Early Detection Services

Secondary/Tertiary Health

Secondary care services relate to specialist care that is provided in a hospital or rural clinic setting or by the hospital's community-based staff.

Tertiary services relate to highly specialised care that is often only provided in a small number of locations.

Access to secondary care services is usually by referral from a primary care practitioner, eg general practitioner. Access to tertiary services is usually on referral from a secondary care specialist.

Whereas primary health services are mostly provided by a wide range of non-government owned organisations, the majority of secondary and tertiary care services are provided by crown-owned public hospital services.

Support Services for Disabled and Older People

Support services for disabled and older people cover a range of services which include:

- Assessment, treatment and rehabilitation, which is largely hospital-based
- Community-based support services that assist people to retain their independence and live in the community. This includes, for example, the provision of nursing services, personal care and home management services.
- Residential care, which is predominantly based around private providers in the community. Residential care is provided to both older and younger people with disabilities.

Disability has been defined by the Ministry of Health as being:

"A person who has a physical, psychiatric, intellectual, sensory, or age-related disability (or a combination of these) that is likely to continue for a minimum of six months, and reduces independent functioning to the extent that ongoing support is required."

Older people are defined as being age 65 years and over.

Support services may include disability support services and/or personal health services that are targeted at older people.

Current Contractors of Personal Health Services: Primary Health Services

The following section identifies fixed value contracts currently in place with Providers.

Primary Health Organisations

There are four Primary Health Organisations which cover the geographical area of MidCentral's district. These organisations are responsible for co-ordination and delivery of general practice, health promotion, and specialised services designed to improve access to primary health care for their enrolled populations, including:

- Provision of first contact primary health care services from general practice settings; including 24 hour a day, 7 day a week cover.
- Health promotion and Services to Improve Access projects designed to enhance the health of local communities.
- Management services including governance arrangements, register management, etc
