DEFINITION OF PORTFOLIOS

Maori Health Service

Maori Health Services are “by Maori, for Maori” meaning they are services specifically targeted to Iwi/Maori, and are delivered by Iwi and Maori providers. The services provided are community-based and include primary health care (particularly family health) and mental health.

(Note: Iwi Maori health providers deliver services to the population but in the main their programmes target Maori because of their high morbidity and mortality rates and health inequalities. Many of the programmes provided are described as Kaupapa Maori because they incorporate Maori beliefs and understandings, and are delivered by Maori.)

Mental Health and Addictions

Mental health and addiction services provide treatment and recovery for individuals experiencing mental illness or addiction issues. Mental health and addiction services also include support for families and increase society’s awareness of the importance of mental health and well being.

Services are delivered across the continuum of care, both regionally and locally. While some individuals are able to lead relatively healthy lives and manage their mental illness, others must rely on full time care within specially designed residential programmes that provide 24 hour, seven days a week services.

Primary Health Care Services

Primary Health Care Services are typically the first and the most frequent point of contact the public has with the health service. These services are available in the community and are delivered in a variety of settings including schools, workplaces, community pharmacies, general practice surgeries, on marae and in people’s own homes.

Primary health care services are usually accessed by self-referral. A range of health professionals provide primary health care services, including:

- General practice teams comprising general practitioners and practice based nurses
- Public health nurses and district nurses
- Iwi and Maori health workers
- Allied health therapists, including podiatrists, physiotherapists, dieticians, smoking cessation and physical activity educators
- Dentists and dental therapists
- Pharmacists in the community
- Midwives and lead maternity carers.

Service providers are supported by medicines dispensing, diagnostic imaging and laboratory services. These services are often free or provided on a highly subsidised basis to the public and make up a major part of the cost of primary care within the district.

Public Health

Public Health is a specialised area of health that addresses the health and well-being of a population. Services are aimed at improving, promoting or protecting health, and/or preventing population-wide disease, disability or injury. Public health includes health promotion services, health protection and regulatory services, plus population-based disease prevention strategies such as the breast screening and cervical screening programmes.

Public health services are commonly clustered around the following activities:

- Public Health Promotion Services
- Public Health Protection and Regulatory Services
- Prevention and Early Detection Services.

Secondary/Tertiary Health

Secondary care services relate to specialist care that is provided in a hospital or rural clinic setting or by the hospital's community-based staff.

Tertiary services relate to highly specialised care that is often only provided in a small number of locations.

Access to secondary care services is usually by referral from a primary care practitioner, for example, general practitioner. Access to tertiary services is usually on referral from a secondary care specialist.

Whereas primary health services are mostly provided by a wide range of non-government owned organisations, the majority of secondary and tertiary care services are provided by crown-owned public hospital services.

Support Services for Disabled and Older People

A range of support services are provided for disabled and older people which include:

- Assessment, treatment and rehabilitation, which is largely hospital-based
- Community-based support services that assist people to retain their independence and live in the community. This includes, for example, the provision of nursing services, personal care and home management services
- Residential care, which is predominantly based around private providers in the community. Residential care is provided to both older and younger people with disabilities.

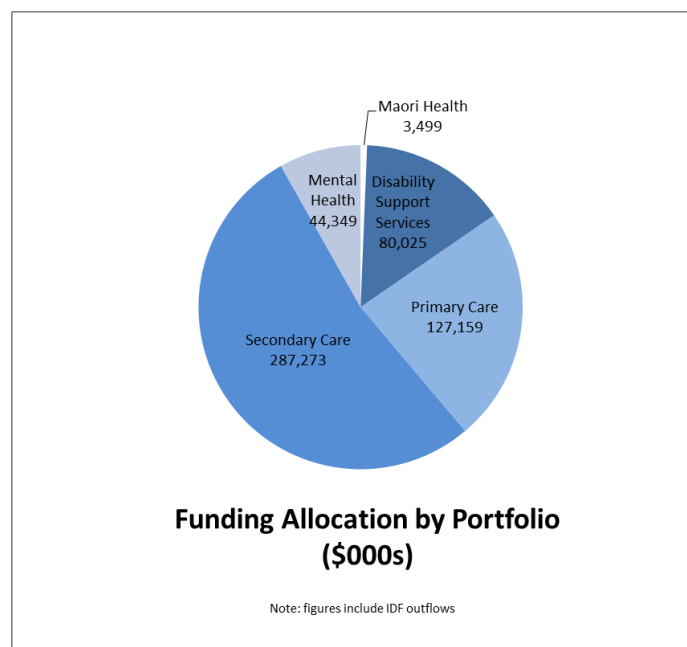

Disability has been defined by the Ministry of Health as:

“A person who has a physical, psychiatric, intellectual, sensory, or age-related disability (or a combination of these) that is likely to continue for a minimum of six months, and reduces independent functioning to the extent that ongoing support is required.”

Older people are defined as being age 65 years and over.

Support services may include disability support services and/or personal health services that are targeted at older people.

Funding Allocation by Portfolio, 2016/17

MidCentral DHB has contracts with a range of providers across primary, secondary, disability support, Maori health and mental health portfolios. These contracts are for a comprehensive range of services.

Details of all contractual arrangements, by contractor and by portfolio, are set out on the following pages.

3. CURRENT CONTRACTORS OF SERVICES

Procurement of Health and Disability Services

Pursuant to clause 25 of the New Zealand Public Health and Disability Act 2000, MidCentral DHB may enter into, negotiate, amend and terminate service agreements/contracts for the provision of services outlined in the Annual Plan, or on terms needed in order to deliver the services required by statute or contract with the Crown.

MidCentral DHB periodically re-tenders health and disability service contracts. Re-tendering may be undertaken for several reasons, including but not limited to improving patient access and/or quality of services, ensuring cost effective and efficient service provision, or aligning to new or reconfigured service requirements. Such procurement processes are undertaken in line with the Office of the Auditor General's guidelines and best practice, and may result in a change in provider arrangements.

In 2016/17 MidCentral DHB intends to review the way it contracts for services with a view to improving their efficiency and effectiveness. This includes reviewing low value contracts and considering opportunities for high trust contracts where the emphasis is on achieving defined outcomes rather than performing prescribed activities. As a result of these processes, there may be changes to contracts that impact on providers and services

3.1 PRIMARY HEALTH SERVICES

The following section identifies contracts currently in place with providers.

It has targeted funding towards a travel component, separating out from the hourly fee for service component. In March 2016 a national standardised methodology was introduced called In-Between-Travel (IBT). IBT covers travel time and cost and addresses inconsistencies with exceptional travel which occurs in rural communities.

Improvements for Carer Workforce: this was targeted funding provided to Home and Community Support providers to aid improvement in the retention of support workers, promote career development and increased skills levels, provide fairer wages and provide a better quality of care serviced to consumers. From 2016, this funding has transitioned to Home and Community Support services within the fee for service funding and will not be reported as a separate funding line or service. All training is now standardised and reported through various auditing regimes.
